2013 Annual Report

FIRST FOR WILDLIFE

SCI Foundation Conservation Artists of the Year

The Conservation Artist of the Year program began in 2007 to recognize outstanding wildlife artists and their commitment to conservation. SCI Foundation selects a world-renowned wildlife artist and dedicated conservationist to create an original artwork. The painting is auctioned at SCI's Annual Hunters' Convention and all proceeds from the auction benefit SCI Foundation's conservation programs. Since 2007, the auctions alone have raised over $127,500 for conservation.

In addition, a limited number of canvas prints are made from the original artwork and distributed to qualifying Safari Club chapters for sale at their annual fundraiser. Each one of these chapters completed at least one mission related project pertaining to Conservation, Education or Humanitarian Services. In 2012, over 138 mission-related projects were completed by these chapters, including 32 conservation projects, 59 education projects and 47 humanitarian services projects.

2014 Conservation Artist of the Year: Linda Besse

Linda Besse is an award-winning wildlife artist and dedicated conservationist based out of Mead, Washington. Her work is collected on four continents and she has exhibited her work at the annual SCI Convention since 2000. Besse has traveled to every U.S. state, 33 countries, and all seven continents to experience first-hand the fauna and flora for her oil paintings. During the summer of 2012, she completed a 459-mile Arctic canoe trip with the Wilderness River Expedition Art Foundation and she is involved in research programs that directly benefit conservation.

SCI Foundation President's Message

As hunters, we have many opportunities to be thankful throughout the year and particularly during our hunting seasons. We cherish our days afield with family, friends, and maybe a special bird dog or two.

This love of the outdoors and respect for those that promote our hunting traditions draws many to help in conservation initiatives. Unlike other international non-profits, Safari Club International Foundation (SCI Foundation) focuses our efforts to promote conservation through science and education and to achieve tangible results for the future of hunting. As you will read, in just the last three years, the SCI Foundation has exceeded expectations. Like so many of you, our conservation programs are our true passion. That is why so many follow their passion and make annual donations to keep our passion moving forward.

Like many volunteers, my personal passion for successful conservation programs is what brought me to this organization. In example, this year we hosted our 12th annual African Wildlife Consultative Forum (AWCF) in Zambia. In unprecedented openness, SCI Foundation gathers African government officials, representatives from professional hunting associations, CITES, non-governmental organizations, the scientific community, and other stake holders to address Africa's most pressing conservation issues. The forum allows African countries and the other organizations to voice their opinions and influence policy makers worldwide. All participants report on scientifically driven research to aid in their Global decision-making.

In addition to our worldwide conservation efforts, outdoor education is a critical component of our mission. The cornerstone of our outdoor education programs is the American Wilderness Leadership School (AWLS). The AWLS experience opens hearts and minds of educators by enhancing their understanding of wildlife ecology through our hunting heritage. The ripple effect caused by "teaching the teachers" means that SCI Foundation can deliver the hunter-conservationist curriculum, through the educators, for generations in the classroom.

I have highlighted only two programs of the SCI Foundation, but there are countless other projects sponsored by the foundation. We advocate for wildlife conservation, outdoor education, humanitarian and veteran activities, maintain a wildlife museum and work with the Boy Scouts of America with youth programs. We do this well and we do this in communities, both domestically and internationally.

Know that SCI Foundation is a unique organization, with proven programs for today's hunters, as well as, future generations of outdoorsmen and women. SCI Foundation displays many of the principles I hold dear, for that, I am proud to serve such a fantastic wildlife organization as its President.

I hope our paths cross out in the field someday soon. Until then...

Respectfully,

Joseph H. Hosmer, President
Safari Club International Foundation

SCI Foundation Executive Director Message

I've just recently completed one-year of service to this great cause and I could not be more excited about the direction of the organization and our mission-focused achievements. I'm eager to share our many accomplishments over the last year – that could not have been possible without your support.

Thanks to your vital assistance we've been the conservation voice for the hunter-conservationist on many fronts including this year's efforts with the Fighting for Lions Campaign. This is a collaborative effort between SCI and SCI Foundation to keep the African Lion off of the US Fish and Wildlife Service Endangered Species List. Our team has stood strong and taken the fight to the Anti-hunting establishment through a revealing report called "Keeping the Lion's Share." More recently, our conservation committee has funded essential lion research and supported anti-poaching measures to both share the third-party science and partner to combat human-wildlife-conflicts and illegal activities. Read more about our collaborative projects in the conservation section of this report.

We continue to have great impact with educators and youth by teaching the principles of the North American Conservation Model. This year our instructors at the American Wilderness Leadership School in Jackson Hole, WY reached over 200 participants with our tailored curriculum that empowers them to implement conservation-themed studies and activities in their respective schools and institutions – from the Archery in Schools program to firearm safety and training we are fostering new leaders and instructors with our core values and mission-focused messages.

I would be remiss if I did not also mention our reach to youth in the Tucson-market. Thanks to our school programs at the International Wildlife Museum thousands of both school groups and visitors are exposed to our sustainable-use wildlife conservation message. More than 23,000 school-aged children participate in museum programs and activities each year.

More recently, we've also established new partnerships with like-minded groups—including the Boys Scouts of America and the Salvation Army Outdoors to educate new audiences about the hunting heritage and conservation of wildlife. We are also working with new corporations including Bell Plantation, Buck Knives, Cabela's, Mossy Oak and Banovich Art.

We've made solid steps forward in our mission initiatives, but so much remains to be done, as many wildlife species continue to face serious conservation threats from human conflicts, poaching, and from the loss of critical habitat. So we'll continue to strive to lead the way by funding vital wildlife research, building capacity among governments, increasing our outreach to students and educators, and working with SCI Chapters to enhance our wide array of humanitarian services which showcase the importance of the hunting community in society.

As we look ahead to 2014, I ask that you please continue your financial commitment to the foundation's mission and vision.

Conservation

SCI Foundation's wildlife conservation programs are science-based and centered on the principles of sustainable use. When humans benefit from sustainable use of any resource, they actively conserve and protect the resource. Well-regulated hunting is one sustainable use activity that generates revenue for wildlife management, conservation incentives, and value for wildlife.

Africa

SCI Foundation continues to develop partnerships with wildlife agencies, local communities, private sector hunting companies and other conservation organizations to work on predator management, human-wildlife conflict and anti-poaching. Population surveys underwritten by SCI Foundation provide the best available information to support wildlife management decisions.

Three expert lion scientists agree that African lions are not on the brink of extinction.

Feature Projects:

- Fighting for Lions Campaign: Campaign to keep African lions from being listed as Endangered by the USFWS on the Endangered Species Act and up listed to Appendix I on the Convention for International Trade in Endangered Species (CITES).
- Raised $1.3 million dollars to fight a listing on the ESA and at CITES.
- Initiated a public education and outreach campaign to provide science based information to the public.
- Conducted a national poll that shows 67% of the public believes that decisions about species in foreign countries should be made under international treaties to ensure protection and global cooperation.
- Gave science-based comments to the USFWS to show that African lions are not on the brink of extinction and had three expert lion scientist agree that African lions are not on the brink of extinction.

➤ AWCF: The largest of the SCI Foundation's programs in Africa, the African Wildlife Consultative Forum (AWCF), convenes most of the sub-Saharan governments, PH Associations, and NGOs for discussions on wildlife management and conservation priorities.

- The 2013 AWCF occurs November 3-8 in Livingstone, Zambia, and will address antipoaching, illicit trade, rhinoceros and elephant issues.
- Collaboration with Zambia to conduct national lion population census.
- 40 delegates from 10 countries attended the forum.
- Worked with the government representatives to draft a letter to the USFWS about lions and their interest in providing information and input into the listing decision.

North America

In North America, SCI Foundation's conservation program focuses on predator-prey ecology and management. For decades, humans intentionally kept predator numbers low to protect livestock and game species. Recently, predators have been allowed to flourish and in some ecosystems, multiple predator species have reached high densities. These situations offer new challenges for achieving suitable balances between species. Wildlife managers must adapt to predator richness and improve their understanding of the interactions between predators and their prey.

Coyote research

Feature Projects:

- Predator-Prey Ecology and Management: SCI Foundation provided cutting-edge animal tracking equipment to place on wild animals in major ongoing research efforts in Alaska, Alberta, California, Newfoundland, Michigan, Montana, Missouri, Washington, Wisconsin and other areas. Hundreds of tracking collars custom-fit for bears, wolves, coyotes, lynx, bobcats, deer, elk, moose and caribou have been deployed.
- The collars continuously monitor predator movements and how they interact with prey and other predators.
- Worked with top researchers in the field of predator-prey ecology to develop a Predator-Prey Kill Site ID Manual. This was made possible in part by the numerous predator-prey research projects funded by SCI Foundation.
- SCI Foundation presented the Predator-Prey Kill Site ID Manual at the 31st Meeting of the International Union of Game Biologist Congress, which took place in Brussels, 2013.

Asia

In Asia, SCI Foundation's conservation initiatives focus on habitat and species enhancement. Understanding the relationship between a species and its habitat is of paramount importance for science-based management. SCI Foundation is collaborating with governments and non-government organizations to conduct population surveys and monitor wildlife habitat quality.

Feature Projects:

- Habitat and Species Enhancement: SCI Foundation has researched the distribution, demographics, and range of argali and urial sheep, saiga antelope, markhor and snow leopard in central Asia. Population surveys are completed to ensure that countries are able to make science-based policy decisions.
- SCI Foundation has created a three year trend analysis for argali sheep in Tajikistan that shows the population is increasing.

Education

Scholarships

- Each of the five Sables Hunting Heritage Scholarships is fully funded at the $100,000 level as of 2013.
- Since 2004, SCIF invested $500,000 in scholarship endowments that have been awarded to a total of 26 college students majoring in wildlife ecology.
- The first SCI Foundation International Scholarships were established at the Southern African Wildlife College for students in the Protected Manager Program and in the Field Ranger program.
- Since 2000, SCIF has awarded $321,000 to 68 scholars attending colleges around the U.S. majoring in a conservation related field of study.

International Wildlife Museum

The International Wildlife Museum opened in February 1988 with over 300 SCI members and contributors in attendance. Since then, over one million visitors have set foot in this unique building in the foothills of the Tucson Mountains.

The museum is dedicated to increasing knowledge of and appreciation for the diverse wildlife of the world as well as explaining the role of wildlife management in sustainable use conservation. Over 400 different species of insects, mammals and birds from around the globe are on display in the 40,000-square-foot facility. Some of the collections are more than 100 years old, and all the animals found at the museum were donated by various government agencies, wildlife rehabilitation centers, captive breeding programs, zoos and individuals.

Since its opening, the keystones of the museum have been a three-story mountain with a variety of wild sheep, goats, ibex and chamois, and McElroy Hall, also known as the Comparative Species Gallery, where every species of African antelope can be viewed at once. Dioramas throughout the museum educate visitors about everything from penguins of Antarctica to the giant deer of the Pleistocene.

The Museum provides a variety of fun, educational opportunities for families, schools and other organizations.

- 53,440 visitors (38.8% children); $220,745.25 admissions revenue; $104,306.89 gross gift shop revenue
- Guided and Self-guided Tours focus on conservation, animal adaptations, and habitats. In FY13, 1,897 adults and 4,976 children visited the museum as part of a group.
- The museum also presents Outreach Programs in the greater Tucson area on topics such as Animal Diversity and Insects and Spiders. 61 programs conducted for libraries, senior centers, schools, churches & other community organizations in FY13.
- Birthday Parties, Camps, and Special Events are a way to combine learning and fun through museum explorations and live animal presentations.

In 2013, the Museum celebrated 25 years of educating the community through:

- a community event in February attended by 1,338 visitors
- a Gala for SCI members in August, raising $43,000 for Museum improvement projects
- and a media night in August attended by members of the media and other attractions

The Museum also dedicates exhibit space to SCIF Conservation Projects.

In addition, signage throughout the museum educates the public about the role hunters play in wildlife conservation, including the variety of contributions, in both time and money, that SCI chapters have made throughout the world towards conservation projects.

- Burning for Wildlife focused on the positive effects of wildfire on wildlife and their habitats
- Roar into the Future highlights why lions are important – ecologically, culturally, and economically – and how sustainable use lion management is crucial for lion conservation.

Consistently works with like-minded organizations, such as Arizona Game and Fish Department.

- Hosts multiple Hunter Education classes throughout the year
- Hosted a workshop in May for teachers to learn about the North American Model of Wildlife Conservation, and resources available for teaching this content
- House endangered species of fish and frogs in our pond, which AZGFD uses to restock populations around the state. ♦
